

This moving illustration by Suryaa Rangarajan captures the reality of women's roles in communities in South Asia. As the keepers of home and hearth, women have been the custodians of home-grown and time-honed cultural practices of sustainability. In Indigenous and local communities women have preserved and restored traditional environmental knowledge, native seeds and foods. On a warming planet their knowledge offers possible solutions for us to learn and embrace.

